CIA Operations to Hinder Allende Confirmed by Director's Testimony

By Seymour M. Hersh

The goal of the clandestine activitles, CIA Director William Colby testified at a top-secret hearing in April, was to "destabilize" the Marcist government of President Allende, who had been elected in 1970.

All of the officials interviewed emphasized that the CIA was not authorized to play any direct role in the coup that overthrew Allende. It was also noted that most of the subsequent denials of agency involvement in the internal affairs of Chile were made in the context of questions about a possible direct U.S. role in the White House counsel Philip Buchen said that the President's pardon of his predecessor was an act of mercy." There was no effort to get from Mr. Nixon an admission of any crime, he said.

Vice-President-designate Nelon Rockefeller called the pardon "an act of conscience, compassion and courage" which, although "undoubtedly controversial in the short run," would "in the long run . . . speed the healing of our nation"

The assistant Senate majority leader, Sen. Robert Byrd. D-W. Va., said the pardon "sets double standard; one standard for the former President of the standard for everybody else."

Sen, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, Campaign Committee, said the pardon is "a disturbing precedent for the country."

The Senate Democratic leader. Mike Mansfield of Montana, said Mr. Ford had informed him of his plans an hour before the public announcement. "It would be easy for me to criticize the President's judgment," Sen. Mans-field said. "I will not do so." Sen. Walter Mondale, D-Minn., described President Ford's action as "the worst possible decision."

"No one wished the former president to go to jail," Sen. Before the jump Mr. Knievel, 34, had called the attempt "the proudest day in my life." Moments later, he was headed nose first into the canyon, his descent slowed by the parachutes that were to have carried him to the rugged ground on the north side and, instead, deployed prematurely.

Rescuers reached the downed Sky-Cycle X-2 within moments, transferred Mr. Knievel to a rescue boat and later transferred him again to a helicopter for the ride back up to the carryon rim. From the boat, he waved to onlookers crowding the edge of the chasm.

Senate Committee Urges End Of Military Aid to S. Korea

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (NYT). to South Vietnam, Cambodia and -The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has proposed that U.S. military aid to South Korea be sharply cut now and phased out completely by 1977 because of what it called "the increasingly repressive measures" of President Chung Hee Park's

The committee action, included in the overall foreign aid authorization bill reported Friday to the floor of the Senate, reflected the irritation on Capitol Hill with the arrests in South Korea of numerous intellectuals, churchmen and other opponents of the regime.

If upheld by the Senate and the House, the committee move would set back severely the planned modernization program for the South Korean armed forces.

The overall bill reduced the administration's authorization requests from $3.25 billion to $2.5 billion for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, but does not af-fect other aid programs amounting to about $5 billion.

The main thrust of the Senate committee's action was to reduce sharply U.S. military assistance and involvement abroad. Attacking the worldwide network of American military assistance advisory groups, the committee re-

"Through this bureaucracy, the United States continues—almost habitually—to dispense hundreds of millions of dollars of weapons in pursuit of such vaguely defined goals as 'stability,' 'balance' and the 'maintenance of friendly relations.' Yet, in the committee's view, there is little evidence that such general purposes have actually been served by this massive and often indiscriminate program."

In its report, the committee cut sharply the military grant program, in which weapons are given free of charge, from $985 million requested by the administration to $550 million, and it proposed that "the entire program, including all military missions, be phased out over a period of three years."

Because of concern over Israel, the committee voted to allow military grant aid after 1977 if there were specific congressional

Of the $1.28 billion, $700 million would be for military aid provided by the Defense Department, $420 million for economic assistance and $160 million in food aid. The administration had asked $750 million in economic aid and $160 million in food aid.

The administration had asked $550.7 million for economic and military aid for Cambodia, but the committee set a ceiling of $347 million $70 million for ecomomic aid, $200 million in military aid and $77 million in food

The committee, stressing the need to end the fighting in Cambodia, also cut from 200 to 175 the number of American officials permitted to be stationed in Cam-

In the Middle East, the committee approved the administration's requests, which included $250 million for Egypt in economic aid, $233.4 million in milttary and economic aid to Jordan and $100 million for a contingency fund intended mostly for Syria. The committee increased economic aid to Israel from $50 million to $250 million and approved military sales credits of $300 million to Israel.

Because of concern over "disregard for human rights" in Chile, the committee also put a ceiling of $65 million on aid there, of which no more than $10 million can be for military The administration had sought $84.9 million, of which $21.3 million was for military sid.

CIA's Anti-Allende Activity Is Confirmed

(Continued from Page 1) The CIA had nothing to do with edge and belief, and I only put in that qualification in case some madman appears down there who without instructions talked to somebody. I have absolutely no reason to suppose it." Details of the CIA's involvement in Chile were first provided by Mr. Colby to the House telligence subcommittee, headed by Rep. Lucien Nedzi, D-Mich., at a special one-day hearing on April 22. The testimony was later made available to Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass, a liberal who has long been a critic of the CIA. Rep. Harrington wrote other members of Congress alx weeks ago to protest both the agency's clandestine activities and the failure of the Nixon administration to acknowledge them despite repeated inquiries from Congress. A copy of a confidential sevenpage letter sent by Rep. Harring-ton to Rep. Thomas Morgan. Deign Affairs Committee, was made available to The New York Times. Rep. Harrington refused comment, calling it confidential. The testimony of Mr. Colby indicates that high officials in the State Department and White House repeatedly and deliberately misled the public and the Congress about the extent of U.S. involvement in the internal affairs of Chile during the three-year life of the Allende government. Shortly after Allende won a plurality in the presidential elections in September, 1970, high Chilean officials told newsmen that the "United States lacks political, economic or military leverage to change the course of events in Chile, even if the administration wished to do so." However, Mr. Colby testified that $500,000 was secretly authorized by the 40 Committee in 1970 to help the anti-Allende forces. Another $500,000 had been provided to the same forces in 1968, Mr. Colby said.

Allende's victory was ratified by the Chilean Congress in October, 1970, and the State Department later declared that the administration had "firmly rejected" any attempt to block his maugura-

Bur Mr. Colby testified that $350,0000 had been authorized by the 40 Committee in an unsuccessful effort to bribe members of the Chilean Congress. The bribe was part of a much more complicated scheme intended to overturn the results of the election, Mr. Colby testified, but the overall plan, although initially approved by the 40 Committee, was later rejected as unworkable. While the CIA was conducting these clandestine operations, there were reductions in U.S. foreign-aid grants to Chile, in lines of credit from American commercial banks. Commodity credits for vitally needed grain purchases also were restricted. U. S. officials have declared that there was no overall administration program designed to limit economic aid to the Allende government, but critics have noted that large-scale loans and aid are now going to Chile.

Allende repeatedly complained about what he told the United Nations in December, 1972, was "large-scale external pressure to cut us off from the world, to strangle our economy and paralyze trade and to deprive us of access to sources of international financing." In 1964, Mr. Colby testified.

some American corporations in Chile volunteered to serve as conduits for anti-Allende funds, but the proposal was rejected. similar proposal in 1970 led to a widely publicized Senate hearing

The CIA director also said that after Allende's election, $5 miltion was authorized by the 40 Committee for more "destabilization" efforts in 1971, 1972 and 1973. An additional $1.5 million was provided to sid anti-Allende candidates in municipal elections last year.

Some of those funds, Mr. Colby testified, were provided to an unidentified, influential anti-Allende newspaper in Santiago.

In his summary of the Colby testimony, Rep. Harrington noted that "funding was provided to individuals, political parties and media outlets in Chile, through both Latin America and Europe. "Mr. Colby's description of these operations was direct, though not to the point of identifying actual contacts and con-duits," Rep. Harrington added.

The failure to arrive at a new proposal is no longer the result of disagreement on basic issues among Mr. Kissinger, Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger and others.

The main reason by all accounts is the chasm between past Soviet and American positions. There is no clear idea how this chasm can be bridged without accepting what administration officials see as "strategic inferi-ority." Compared with this dif-ficulty, the differences within the administration are minor.

Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Schle-singer, officials say, are not now pressing for specific arms pro-posals. Both seem to be waiting for the President, who is not well versed in this subject, to ing 1,410 and 950. The agreement did not include limits on long-range bombers, of which the United States has about 400 and the Soviet Union. about 125. Nor did-this accord encompass MIRVs.

Soviet Growth Seen

The United States already has thousands of multiple warheads and could have more than 10,000 by 1980. Pentagon officials speculate that Moscow could have as many as 17,000 multiple warheads mounted on its missiles by the mid-1980s, although it now has

When Washington would propose an American advantage in the number of land-based missiles with multiple warheads and a Soviet advantage in the throwweight or lifting power of land-based missiles, Moscow would counter that it wanted both the throw-weight advantage and equal numbers of land-based missiles with multiple warheads. Differing Views

Mr. Kissinger was eager to reach an accord limiting multiple warheads on both sides and was not as concerned about the spread between Washington and Moscow on numbers of land-based missiles with multiple warheads and discrepancies in launching power. Mr. Schlesinger was more concerned about numbers, and he also did not want to push for an agreement on multiple warheads at the expense of reaching an ac-

The White House, simultaneously with Mr. Ford's announcement, said that Attorney General William Saxbe has ruled that the former President's White House ents, papers and tapes are Mr. Nixon's personal property.

Mr. Nixon has agreed that his presidential files will be kept for possible use in court in the next three years, during Watergate litigation. But the agreement he reached with Mr. Ford's administration permits him to destroy the Watergate tape recordingswhich figured prominently in the political scandal's unraveling-in five years.

The agreement concerning access to and preservation of his files was signed by Mr. Nixon Priday. It had been negotiated as Mr. Ford moved toward granting Mr. Nixon a pardon.

Mr. Ford's lawyer, Philip Buchen, said the pardon was not conditioned on the screement concerning the White House files. Mr Buchen said Mr Ford in-

COLUMBIA, S.C., Sept. 8 (AP). -Edward Courtney Bullock Dan-forth jr., 80, the World War I captain credited with converting Sgt. Alwin York from conscientious objector to heroic doughboy, died yesterday.

Mr. Danforth, a native of Augusta, Ga., enlisted as a private in 1915 in the 1st Georgia Infantry. He became a captain in 1917 and commanded a com-pany of the 328th Infantry,

York, a Tennesseean assigned to Capt. Danforth's unit, had originally claimed conscientious objector status out of a belief that killing was wrong. Capt. Danforth is credited with persuading him that fighting in this case was justified

York went on to win the Congressional Medal of Honor for heroism in action against the German Army. He became one of the war's most celebrated heroes and a Hollywood movie was made about his exploits. York died in 1964. Capt. U.S. Aides Are Said to Clash on Oil Pri had said to Mr. Simon in front of President Ford that he, Mr. Morton, would like to head the

By Edward Cowan WASHINGTON, Sept. (NYT) .- Under orders from Treasury Secretary William and Interior Secretary Rogers Morton, federal officials have begun devising a plan to phase out crude-oil price controls by Pehrnary.

The plan figures importantly in a backstage power struggle among Mr. Simon, Mr. Morton and Federal Energy Administrator John Sawhill.

Simon

Mr. Simon believes that an integral part of the plan will help to make it politically palatable to Congress. The part calls for enactment of the windfall profits tax on oil producers, a levy first proposed by the White House in December.

An approach drafted last week and reliably reported by Treasury officials to be preferred by Mr. Simon, who is chairman of the cabinet-level Energy Committee, would let oil now controlled at $5.25 a barrel rise in four monthly jumps of $1.25 each to $10.25. That is approximately the going price for uncontrolled domestic oil, which accounts for roughly 40 per cent of the daily production of nine million bar-

5 Cents a Gallon

The cost to consumers, according to a planner, would be $10.4 billion a year or roughly 5 cents a gallon at the gasoline pump. The planner said that the increase would add only fourtenths of 1 per cent to the consumer price index.

On paper, the windfall tax, if enacted, would take $4 billion to $5 billion from producers in the first year, and lesser amounts thereafter. But the House Ways and Means Committee had added a provision to a tax bill that would virtually nullify the tax by making it inapplicable to producers that reinvest in exploration and development an amount equal to the tax. This "plowback" provision would reduce the total additional tax on off companies to $670 million in the first year.

There appears to be no possibility that the tax will be enacted this year. Even if Congress has a post-election session, there is slight likelihood of passage. Tax proposals affecting the oil industry, which include a phaseout of the depletion allowance by 1979, have been added to a wideranging tax bill that contains dozens of controversial features. The plan to phase out petroleum price controls and an alternative plan to end them all at once were drafted following an Energy Committee meeting at the Treasury Department Wed-

U.S. Is Said to Halt Ships Of Uranium Fuel to New I

By John W. Finney

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (NYT). The United States has stopped delivery of uranium fuel to India until the Indian government clarifies its policy on nuclear tests, Atomic Energy Commission officials disclosed yesterday.

The U.S. action-the first time that the United States as a matter of policy has stopped shipment of atomic fuel to a foreign country-was in response to India's detonation of what it described as a "neaceful nuclear explosion" in May.

[Dixy Lee Ray, the chairman of the AEC, said on Friday that the agency is continuing the shipment of uranium fuel to India, the Associated Press reported. The AEC has not stopped any shipment of uranium fuel to India," Mrs. Ray said.] India obtained the plutonium for the atomic device from a relatively small research reactor supplied by Canada, a step that Canadian government protested was in violation of a 1971 agreement between the two countries. As a result of the Canadian experience, the AEC is seeking to strengthen its controls to prevent a similar diversion of atomic assistance from the United States into nuclear test explo-

U.S. officials have repeatedly emphasized to the Indian government that the United States regards "peaceful" and "military" nuclear devices as technically indistinguishable.

The Indian government has argued that its atomic explosives are limited to peaceful purposes, such as earth excavation, and it has contended that it, therefore had not violated an agreement with Canada in using plutonium produced in the reactor for an stomic explosion.

The United States is seeking commitments from New Delhi that plutonium produced in atomic power plants supplied by the United States will not be used for any type of nuclear explosion. Thus far, according to officials of the AEC, India has declined to provide such flat fONG KONG, Sept. 8.—China's of 1974. Mr. Teng was reappointed to the powerful Political Bureau of the Communist party. Mr. Chou's death will confront 70-year-old Mr. Teng with enormous problems.

Mr. Mac is no longer the determining factor in the Chinese power equation, except insofar as actions are taken in his name. But Mr. Teng's first problem will be reaching an accommodation with Mr. Mao, Doing so will be difficult because Mr. Mao is resentful of Mr. Teng's previous behavior toward him, but it will

Leftist Enemies of Chon Mr. Teng also will will have to deal with the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau, the small group that actually runs day-to-day affairs. It is loaded with leftist enemies of Mr. Chou. Unless Mr. Teng secures the immediate backing of the generals of the army, he will not be able to assume Mr. Chou's full powers. Mr. Teng's chances of winning the military's support are good however, for two reasons: his old associations with so many key generals and the fact that they will need him very badly to preserve order. In any event, the upper levels of the Communist party will be shaken by bitter contention. Although they lack any real power base in the administration or the army, the leftists will not lightly surrender their formal positions within the Political Bureau. Mr. Teng will also be handicapped because he has aroused per-sonal antipathy in many of his colleagues by his abrasive manner and his unconcealed ambi-tion. He is, further, distrusted because of his past opportunism. China will lack any figure capable of filling the crucial role that Mr. Chou has played for almost 50 years. No individual will command even minimal trust from most rival factions. There will, therefore, be no truly effective go-between to reconcile factional conflicts for the benefit of the nation. Certainly no one else possesses the enormous personal prestige that Mr. Chou has brought to that function. Initially, at least, Mr. Chou's passing is likely to have deleterious effects on China's relations with both the United States and the Soviet Union. The American connection was the crown of Mr. Chou's career, the personal element is strong in the relationship. However. Sino-American relations after a reasonably brief period of time. The two countries are linked by common interests and mutual dangers which transcend

The Russians, who will lack any major Chinese figure with whom they can negotiate with confidence, may initially welcome the disorder caused by Mr. Chou's passing as giving them opportunities to improve their position. But friction rapidly developed between left-wing and right-wing groups of the wide-ranging Peronist movement, Mr. Firmenich said the guerrillas had decided to go underground again because of "aggressions by police and para-police groups against the people's forces."

The final break between the militant Peronist left and Mrs. Peron's government apparently was signaled by an article in a leftist magazine. La Causa Peronista last week. The article described in detail the 1970 assassination of former President Pedro Aramburu. It was signed by Mr. Firmenich and another Montonero, both of whom were convicted of the killing and later granted amnesty. On Friday, Mrs. Peron ordered La Causa Peronista closed, charging it with consistently seeking to undermine Argentine unity. The magazine, the last remaining organ of the Peronist left, was the seventh publication to be shut in a year. A newspaper, Noticias, which was considered close to the Montoneros, was banned two weeks ago.

The CIA—Again

have surfaced in The New York Times and The Washington Post have a number of connotations and implications. Details are still fuzzy, but there seems little reason to doubt that the Central Intelligence Agency did funnel sizable sums into the South Amerscan country to "destabilize" the Aliende government - that is, to help prepare the way for its eventual overthrow.

The main impact of these revelations will be to strengthen the fears of those, Amerscans and others, who see a CIA man under every bed. This is a factor that cannot fail to hinder the normal course of American diplomacy, whether those fears are justified or not in any particular instance.

The second principal indication from the accounts of the secret testimony given by William Colby, director of the agency, before the House Armed Services subcommittee of intelligence, is that the CIA is not the independent arm that many hold it to be. In this case, the CIA's distribution of cash in Chile was authorized by an executive body -the Committee of 40—headed by Secretary of State Kissinger, and was reported, after the fact, to the House subcommittee. But these all acted in extreme confidentiality... the testimony has only now been trickled out to the public.

Yet this trickling is, in itself, significant, It points to the growing fact that governmental secrecy will be ever harder to maintain in the wake of Watergate, and that the CIA can expect no favors from Congress or the press because of constantly mounting skepticism over its role and its manner.

When the CIA was instituted, it had a legacy from World War II in its favor: the Office of Strategic Services, which had bat-

The stories of CIA activities in Chile which tied secretly and with no small degree of success against enemies who certainly used the same tactics toward goals which Americans opposed. It had another advantage: despite present-day revisionism, the cold war was not something which Washington imposed on a reluctant world. The manner in which Eastern Europe became Communist. and especially the fall of that last bastion of democracy (Western style), Czechoslovakia, made clandestine operations to prevent such coups elsewhere seem laudable and necessary.

> Are they any less needed today? The concentration in recent years on the effects of American policy in South Korea, South Vietnam, Greece and Chile has been such as to obscure the kind of government imposed on North Korea, North Vietnam and Cuba, or the ways in which they have sought to extend their influence. And this leaves out of the account Soviet and Maoist techniques. Since they stand for revolution and their opponents for what is deemed reaction, they have a better hearing among the more articulate groups in the West today. And, in any case, they can work under a secrecy which was once, at the height of the cold war, acceptable in the United States, but which has lost almost all standing today.

The problem is not an easy one. Openness is a dominant characteristic of American society, which only occasionally and with strict limitations accepts the need for secrecy. And when a Watergate bubbles under the cloak, it is the cloak that is, naturally, blamed. Yet with a large portion of the world still acting under it, some degree of confidentiality remains essential in some areas of policy. The dilemma must somehow be resolved-and not by denying there is a very sharp one.

Banks in Jeopardy

The disclosure by Lloyds Bank, one of Britain's big four, that a Swiss branch has suffered losses of up to $75 million because of "irregularities" in its foreign-exchange dealings has sent a chill of fear through the entire international financial community. Indeed, national authorities and ordinary citizens had better sit up and take notice, for the heavy losses at Lloyds, coming on top of the near-collapse of the Franklin National Bank of New York and the failure of the Herstatt Bank and others in Germany. should serve as a warning that the sort of disaster that struck the world in 1931 with the collapse of the Austrian Credit-Anstalt is no longer unthinkable

Lloyds Bank itself, with capital and reserves of $1.2 billion and first-half profits this year of $184 million, is capable of carrying its branch's losses. Nevertheless, that even Lloyds, with its reputation for scrupuious management and regularity, could suffer multimillion-dollar losses from so-called unauthorized foreign - exchange dealings raises serious questions about the internal supervision by all banks, especially of their foreign-exchange departments and their foreign branches and subsidiaries. It also stirs doubts about the external banking supervision of national regulatory authorities.

A great improvement in both the internal and external supervision of banks has been made urgent by several developments. One is the huge growth of multinational banking, with many branches, divisions and subsidiaries managed by inexperienced or incompetent officers. A second is the switch from fixed to a floating exchange-rate system. This greatly increases the risks of foreignexchange rates, supported by national central banks, to protect unsophisticated dealers from enormous losses. The third is the multibillion-dollar build-up of short-term liquid assets, especially since the quadrupling of oil prices. Huge flows of foreign exchange have gone to the oil producers-money which can suddenly rush from banks in one country to banks in another, and out of small banks

There is need for much closer supervision by the banking authorities over all banking institutions on their national territories, whatever the resident banks' national (or multinational) origin and ownership. There is also need for a firmer and clearer agreement among national central banks about who is responsible for rescuing banks that get into serious trouble and what the guidelines will be as to whether particular banks will be saved or allowed to go under. Clearly. not every banking institution, no matter how badly or dishonestly managed, should be bailed out and kept afloat indefinitely. But innocent depositors and other creditors need to be protected, and even more fundamentally, the entire financial and economic system needs to be safeguarded.

Gen. Haig's Future

Reports that Gen. Alexander Haig jr. may leave his present post as chief of the White House staff to become supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and of U.S. forces in Europe inevitably raise questions about the dangers inherent in such a high-level shuttle between positions of political and military power.

That Gen. Halg possesses in abundance the diplomatic, if not the military, qualifications for the NATO post has been amply demonstrated in a career that carried him swiftly upward since his appointment, while gtill a colonel five years ago, to be Henry Kissinger's chief aide on the National Security Council. The troublesome question is less one of capacity than of the further extension of an unhealthy revolving-door concept that destroys lines between civilian and military.

Many will argue that the decision by Gen. Haig to resign his commission in June, 1973. when President Nixon asked him to pick up the pieces left by H. R. Haldeman's involvement in Watergate, was solely a reflection of the Haig sense of duty in the traditional military sense.

Easy conversion of military men into civiltan officials, and back again, cannot be viewed with equanimity in a democratic government. The shortcomings of the mil-Stary mind at times of political crisis were Mustrated when Gen. Haig told acting Attorney General William Ruckelshaus that he must fire Archibald Cox as special Watergate prosecutor because "your commander-inchief has given you an order."

True, Gen. Haig did not feel so rigidly bound by such a mistaken code of loyalty during the fading hours of the Nixon administration. Indeed, his sensible counsel at that time reportedly was helpful in speeding Mr. Nixon's resignation and thus facilitating an orderly transition of government.

Yet, even the chronicle of those anxious hours serves only to underscore the dangers inherent in the presence of men of high military rank in top places of government where decisions ought to be firmly in civilian hands, insulated against all potential pressure by the armed forces. One cannot ignore the hypothetical consequences had Gen, Haig, or a different kind of general, adhered to the purely military code of loyalty to a commander-in-chief whose constitutional legitimacy had ceased.

The issue of military-civilian interchangeability brings up the same worrles that always attend presidential decisions to draft the chief justice or other members of the Supreme Court for ticklish assignments of national importance. The almost inescapable end-result is a blurring of lines that are better left inviolate At the very least, the remilitarizing of Gen. Haig ought to be the last turn of a door that should never have started spinning.

Democracy in Trouble in Western Europe

By James Reston

DUBLIN-A political fourney and generations but about inteacross Western Europe these days is a depressing and expensive business. Inflation has pro-duced doubt and anxiety about the institutions of liberal democracy. Never since the last world war have the free nations been so dependent on one another-so much at the mercy of events beyand their borders-or at the same time so stubbornly nationalistic and preoccupied with their own internal struggles.

Ireland is only the most dramatic and tragic symbol of this narrow and separatist mood, Geographically and economically, it is bound, north and south, and linked to Britain and Europe, but it is also separated by history and religion. And the crowning paradox: it is engaged in a religious war among unbelievers, tyrannized by a minority of ex-tremists on both sides.

Two powerful but contradictory forces seem to be in conflict in Europe today. Its old empires are gone. Separated one nation from another, it is weak. Divided within each nation it is weaker still, But united, it has the people, brains and resources to stand in the farefront of the coming age alongside the United States the Soviet Union, and the emerging power of China and Latin

This, however, is not the way Europe is going today. Looking from west to east, Ireland is hating the British Army in Ulster, but fearing that the withdrawal of that army for financial reasons in London might lead to a disastrous civil war.

Portugal is finally abolishing its ore, but it is run by a weak and distracted government and confronted by a well-organized Communist party.

Transition

Spain is also trying to make the transition from the authoritarian government of Generalissimo Francisco Franco to a monarchy-also opposed by a strong Communist party, which has kept its organization and discipline ever since the civil war of the

France, almost by accident and the shrewdness of Valery Giscard d'Estaing, just missed a popular front government of Socialists and Communists under François Mitterrand, but it will take all of Giscard d'Estaing's intelligence and style to establish the peace ful revolution of reform he has

Italy is broke and in such a political tangle that even politica leaders in West Germany and France now suggest that maybe a coalition government in Rome including the Communists, might not be a bad thing Greece has made such a mess of things that it has come to the verge of war with Turkey over Cyprus, and like France it has illed its troops out of the NATO

On Their Way Out Meanwhile, Marshal Tito in Yugoslavia, the stabilizing influence between East and West in the Balkans, is coming to the end of his days. The last of the old generation of World War II leaders-Mao Tse-tung and Chon En-lai in China; Franco in Spain; Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa:

Hafle Sciassie in Ethiopia—are all on their way out, Accordingly, the question is what the new leaders of the world -Ford in Washington, Giscard d'Estaing in Paris, Chancellor Schmidt in Bonn Tanaka in Japan, and Wilson or Heath in Britain—will do about this critical transitional period in world his-

For the moment, they are doing very little about it. Like the Irish, they are preoccupied with the narrow and immediate political and economic problems at home, and the more they try to solve world problems by national political tactics, the deeper they get into trouble

Fortunately, in Europe there is another force at work in the universities, in the newspapers, and particularly among the rising young generation. The teachers, the reporters and the students are more mobile now than ever before. They are seeing a different coming age. They are talking not about separation of the nations

Even some politicians in Europe are beginning to think beyoud the divisions of the present to the possibility of unity in the Giscard d'Exteing in future, France and Schmidt in Germany are searching for new answers to the new economic and political problems, The Republic of Ireland, for example, has a brilliant

Fitzgerald, who is risking his political position by arguing publich for a new unified Ireland. "I believe the time has come,"

he wrote, "for all Irish politicians who genuinely believe in a united Ireland, so or spised that people from both communities will feel equally at home within it to speak out and to lead the people of Ireland toward this goal. We

young foreign secretary, Garret

may find that some of our people reject this lead, and that in the process existing political structures become cracked or even shattered; this is the price we shall have to pay if called upon to do so.

So in the short run the outlook in Europe is bleak, but there is a new rising generation and it is beginning to emphasize not separation but integration

But for most workers who are nominally covered by private plans fewer than half are such plans remain what they have always been: a lottery in which most lose and the winners get only a pittance.

A critical section of the new law concerns "vesting." A worker who leaves a pension-covered job has a vested right to a pension if he has worked for a company for a specific length of time. Under the new law, a firm has to give a worker full rights to his pension after 10 years of employment, Alternatively, it can give him a right to 25 per cent of his pension after only five years, with until he is fully vested after 15 years of employment.

Thus, a worker earning $10,000 a year who leaves his job after five years multiplies his salary by his length of ser-vice for a total of $50,000. One and one-half per cent of that is $750 of which he has a vested right under the new law to onequarter or $187.50 a year when he is 65. With a pension like some Arab leader mentioning the 'rights of the Palestinians" or another leader talking about a "free democratic Palestine," etc. I think that people need a con-stant reminder that these slogans are merely euphemisms for the destruction of Israel, and are being used instead of the older slogan of "throwing the Jews into the sea." in order to calm public opinion The Palestinian National Covenant of 1968 states the aims of the Palestine Liberation Organization and its affiliated organiza tions, and is fully supported by the Arab states. This covenant, which was reconfirmed in June of this year in Cairo, is very explicit: The Palestinians will set-tle for nothing less than "the complete liberation of Palestine' (Article 21). Palestine is defined as the British Mandate area (Art. 2) which includes Israel and maybe Jordan. Jews who came to Palestine after the "Zionist invasion" (usually interpreted as 1917) are without rights (Art. 6). The Jewish people are not a nation and have no national rights (Art. 20), Only Palestinians have the right to self-determination (Art. 3) and Palestine will be part of the Arab nation

In short, Jews will be completely without rights in a "free dem-ocratic Palestine" and those that survive will be again forced into

It is even doubtful that Arabs living in a PLO-run Palestine will have many rights. The use of terror to quiet opposition is a favorite weapon of the PLO. One recent example. Mahmoud Abud Zaler, the editor of the Jerusalem Arab daily Al Kuds, who has called for the "right of self-determination" for the Palestinian Arabs on the West Bank and Gaza has been repeatedly threatened by Fatah and has just recently had his car set on fire as a warning. By calling for selfdetermination he is challenging the claim of the PLO to represent all Palestinians. This and other similar incidents indicate that a PLO-run Palestine will resemble the other Arab states which, with the exception of Lebanon, are all military, theocratic or royal dictatorships. Not All Nazis As a former German soldier ficer in the Panzer-Lehr-Division which fought at Bastogne in cember 1944, I was a little bit astonished to read in your Sept. 5 edition that Gen. Oreighton W. Abrams, one of our courageous enemies in the Battle of the Bulge, "lought the Nazis from Normandy into Germany." - I would like to remind the following facts to George C. Wilson, the author of the obit-USITY:

1) The great mass of the German soldiers of World War II were far from being "Nazis." were soldiers fighting for their country, as every other sol-dier involved in this unhappy 2) If Gen. Abrams would have had to fight only Nexis, he might have reached the German frontier not in December, but in July 1944. "The Nazis" were, as everyone in Germany knew, quite far from the battlefront, 3) Would a French or an American or British be delighted if someone, at a moment of history or another, had fought "the Napoleonists," the "McCarthyists" "the Laborites"? It is not that I want to put the Nazis on the same level as i.e. the Bonapartists. But I would be very happy if this unfortunate and willingly accomplished assimilation "German soldier-Nazi" would finally cease.

AUGUST VON KAGENECK.

At first glance, 10 years of are all rigged in favor of the worker who spends most of his working life with one firm. In this fast-moving, technologically innovative economy, it makes no sense-for society or for the individual worker-to encourage plans that reward the standpatter. The economy benefits if labor is reasonably mobile, As for the worker, how can a young man of 30 know today whether It is in his best interests to stick with the same company until he is eligible for his pension in the year 2009? Despite all the talk about women's "liberation," the new law once again leaves women holding the bag. If a male worker dies in his late lifties, his widow sets no pension. If he lives to retirement and is already receiving a pension and then dies, she gets only half of what he was getting. Moreover, she gets that onehalf only if her husband had aled her benefit option to stand Experience has shown that many workers reject that option because it means the pension during their own lifetimes will be drastically smaller. Only 2 per cent of widows collect pensions from private plans. Contrast that with Social Security, where one out of every three persons collecting a pension is a surviving dependent, and where a widow gets the same basic pension her husband received

Sad Truth The sad truth is that private pension plans are one of canitalism's bad ideas. Such plans make sense for a few high-salaried executives. But in extending them to all their workers, most companies find they simply do not have the economic base to provide a decent reliable pension to their workers and their survivors. If these plans did not "con" most of the participants out of any substantial benefit, they would so bankrupt As it is, many pension plans are technically insolvent. If the stock market keeps going through the wringer, the pension plans of some very reputable companies are going to be in terrible trouble, A study last year found that the pension funds of 375 companies were on paper in deficit by more than $10 billion

In the eight months since that survey, conditions have worsened. pension funds are heavily invested in the glamorous growth stocks such as IBM, Xerox, Polaroid, and Avon whose share prices have suffered a sickening Pensions are a job for the government because only the government has the ultimate resources to underwrite an adequate system. When will union leaders and politicians stop trying to patch up the unpatchable and tell people the truth? C The New York Times.

We can no longer measure he cost of the automobile in erms of money alone.

From its very birth at the turn of the century the automobile has been man's most favoured creation/obsession.

He has given to it three generations of time and thought and energy and money.

It has given to him a mobility that has enlarged his world and enriched his life.

And along the way it has given him one more thing. A headache. A very large headache.

For the automobile, even before the energy crisis, was beginning to cause problems. Serious problems. It was growing in size as it grew in number. It was strangling our cities, clogging our highways and polluting our air.

Then along came the energy crisis. An even bigger problem, and a hardship for all of us. But more important, a warning for all of us. A warning that we're using up the earth.

In addition to running short of oil, we're running out of copper and zinc and phosphates and other critical resources.

Which brings us to the true price we pay for an automobile (or a refrigerator or a tv set). The true price has to be the money it costs plus the amount of natural resources it uses up. Both in building it and operating it.

Which brings us to big cars vs. small cars, and the tables opposite.

As you see, it takes over twice the raw material to build a big car and nearly twice the energy to operate it.

And that, combined with all the other problems it causes, is why the day of the behemoth is drawing to a close. The price is too high to pay.

This, believe it or not, is going to be more of a hardship on car companies than on car buyers. The car company has to give up big car profits. The car buyer has only to give up the big car habit.

And that shouldn't be difficult. For a small car can be a joy in its own.

As rather conclusive proof, Fiat is and has been for years, the biggest selling car in Europe. And the name Fiat means small car.

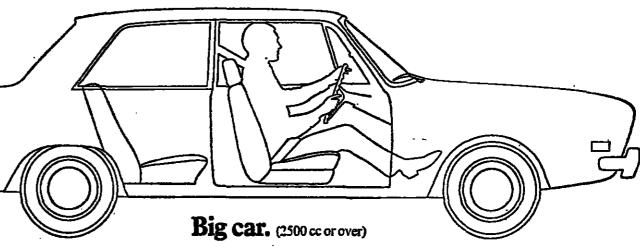

We not only made the world's first small car, we now make the widest range of small cars. We've had more experience at it than anyone. We're better at it than anyone.

Even during recent years, when a great number of car makers (not only in the U.S.) jumped on the big car bandwagon, 90% of Fiat production remained in small cars.

All of this, you're thinking, leads to one logical conclusion: we'd like to sell you a Fiat. Most definitely. That's the purpose of any advertisement.

But in this case there's another purpose too. And that is to suggest that if all of us can learn to live without excesses today, we may not have to live without essentials tomorrow.

Hunger Encloses Java's Fruitful Fields

By Joseph Lelyveld

The irrigated paddies are vivid shades of green as the grain ripens in the sun; ducks cruise the irrigation canals; fruit trees grow everywhere, offering a seemingly endiess supply of plantain, mango, papaya, and more exotic fruits with names like belimbing jambu and nangka, whose textures and tastes seem beyond the imaginations of denizens of the temperate zone.

If hunger is rarely spoken about here, it is only because the Java--a people of elaborate politeness and reserve-regard it as unseemly to speak bluntly about their most urgent needs. It soon becomes obvious that most of Sawahrejo lives on the edge of

Half an Acre

The fecundity of Java extends to its people, and, although it has been said for decades that the saturation point surely had been reached, the population has continued to rise. Now there are about 80 million persons living in an area only slightly larger than the state of New York, in rural Pemalans County, where the hamlet is situated, the density is about 2.200 persons a square mile If the United States had that density, its population would ex-

In Sawahrejo 420 householdsabout 2,000 persons—live on 673 acres, a little more than a square Of the households, 284 farm less than half an acre and 78 are classified as landless.

Consider the case of Mr. Kayin -Indonesians typically have one name-whose holding like that of 184 other peasants in the hamlet, is one-fifth of an acre. It is really a patch of garden rather than a farm, and because it is so small, Mr. Kayin is able to lavish loving attention on every seedling poor Javanese eat as a suppleand check daily for weeds, insects and rats that might threaten his tiny harvest.

By careful cultivation, he can reap nearly 500 pounds of rice in a good season—barely enough to sustain himself, his wife and their two surviving children. Three other children died: in Java, one-quarter of all deaths are children under a year old,

How barely the land sustains the family can be seen in Mr. Kayin as he trudges barefoot through the fields. At about 45 -he is unsure of his exact age -he is gaunt rather than wiry, not middle-aged, but old.

A Realist

Mr. Kayin sells only enough rice to buy seeds for the next season and small doses of fertilizer. On his present crop, nine pounds of fertilizer, costing less than SI even at a black-market price, was all he thought he could afford.

Because he is a realist. Mr. Ravian accents the fact that he will never be able to afford the high-yield seeds, insecticide and quantities of fertilizer that have dramatically increased the output and incomes of larger landholders in recent years. All he can hope for is opportunities to work as a day laborer in the larger landowners' fields at the going a day, and meals.

Such work, which he apparently finds no more than 120 days a year, provides his family with its only cash income, nearly all which goes for cassava, a starchy root that he and other

Washington (IST).—Kenneth Rush, the newly nameed American ambassedor to France, describes himself as "thrilled and excited" to be undertaking what he feels is "the major ambassadorial challenge" facing the United States today.

Although his diplomatic experience consists solely of 2 1/2 years as ambassador to West Germany, during that time Mr. Rush not only was mainly responsible for the four-power scoess agreement on Berlin but also was able to help guide U.S.-West German relations through a delicate transition

Mr. Rush, 64, began his career in government with the Bonn position after resigning as president of Union Carbide. He had been an attorney and, at Duke, he had as one of his students Richard Nixon. The relationship endured and, when Mr. Nixon became president, he asked Mr. Rush to become ambassador to West Germany.

When he took up the post in 1969, the West Germans were prepared for the worst. There were disparaging remarks in the press on Mr. Rush's lack of diplomatic experience and a sense of grievance that the Bonn embassy had been given to an unknown.

Brandt to Power

To complicate matters, Willy Brandt led his Social Democrats to power and began a policy of seeking friendship with Eastern Europe. There were fears that Mr. Rush, a conservative Republican, would see this asinimical to American interests and would never be able to develop a working relationship with Mr. Brandt

But Mr. Rush confounded all these fears by using his access to Mr. Nixon to convince the former President that it was time to help the West Germans toward reasserting their independence in foreign policy. Mr. Rush was the prime mover in turning Washington's initial suspicion of Mr. Brandt's Ostpolitik into firm support for the chancellor's overtures to the Communist bloc.

The capstone of Mr. Rush's diplomatic achievement was the four-power Berlin agreement described by then Secretary of State William Rogers as one of Nixon administration's major schievements.

With no previous experience on the Berlin question, Mr. Rush became the unofficial leader of the Western negotiating team and, after 17 months of grueling talks, was able to get an agreement with far more concessions from the Russians than anyone had believed pos-

French Ambassador Jean Sauvagnargues, now Foreign Minister, another member of the negotiating team, praised Mr. Rush as "a big-league talent." Another ambassador said, "The Berlin agreement is Rush's monument. More than anyone else, he's the man who did it."

Praised by Germans

When Mr. Rush was recalled from the Bonn post to take over the No. 2 position in the Pentagon in 1972, his successful negotiating and his help in bringing about American recognition of West German aspirations brought widespread expressions of praise from Mr. Brandt and his government and tributes for "his services to Gor-

Despite all the efforts by economists and others to make distinctions among various segments of the labor force—the jobless rate for married men vs. that for teen-agers, for example—the overall unemployment rate is still the "political trigger."

Making due allowance for conservative advice and political courage, President Ford would be hard put next year to resist messures to pump up the economy again if the unemployment rate should exceed the 6 per cent mark and, particularly, 6.5 per cent, as the standard forecasts now pro-

Scientists Work on 'Superplant' in Mexico

By Boyce Rensberger EL BATAN, Mexico CNYT).— Plant breeders have long dreamed of combining the most desirable characteristics from a variety of agricultural crops into a single "superplant" that could resist insects, survive droughts and still produce large yields of highly nutritious food.

Until recently, the biological forces that present one species from mating with another-bar-riers without which the present diversity of species could never have evolved as distinct lineages -have prevented this. Now, however, researchers at the International Corn and Wheat Improvement Center here are developing techniques to overcome some of these barriers. They

Must Start Now

"It is futuristic," Mr. Campos added. "If there's a payoff, it won't come for many, many years, But I know this: Many, many years from now we are going to need to increase our food production still more. We must start now if we are going to be ready

is to remove the male organs

from the normally bisexual flowers of the plant, thus preventing pollination of the variety by itself, and to dust pollen from another variety over the remaining female organs. If the two varieties are of differing species, the pollen fails to fertilize the ova within the female organs. The exact-nature of the barrier to fertilization is not well understood but one theory is that it might be analogous to the immune mechanism in animals that prevents grafting of foreign tissue onto a host.

Working on this theory, Dr. Lynn Bates of Kansas State University experimented with a number of drugs used to suppress the rejection phenomenon in organ transplants. He injected them into the leaf enclosing a wheat spike for a number of days as the flowers emerged.

Success Reported

When the female organs were dusted with pollen from a barley plant, the fertilization was successful and an embryonic plant formed to become the germ of the resulting seed

Working in cooperation with

Dr. Bates, Dr. Campos has adapt-

the techniques for use at CIMMYT and improved the methods for growing the widecross seed into an adult plant. His methods have led to a much higher proportion of surviving wide crosses, not only of wheat with barley but of barley and rye wheat and rye, wheat and a wild grass, corn and a wild corn-like species that is resistant to drought, and many others. With the exception of the wheat-rye cross, none of the wide crosses has yet produced a variety immediately useful in agriculture but Dr. Campos said he believed that further selective breeding might build in other characteristics to make the crosses useful Crosses of wheat and rye, combining the high yield of wheat with the wide climatic adaptability and better protein quality of rye, have been made for some years. The resulting hybrid call-"triticale" (a contraction of the genus names of the two species), is now in limited commercial use in Canada and the United States

Many bankers in Germany and elsewhere agree that the major threat to the banking industry is loss of public confidence, which has been supped by the bandful of failures and the large losses re-ported by some banks. Last week's report of the 233-million loss suffered by Lloyds Bank due to unauthorized currency speculation at its Lugano branch was the most recent of these mishaps.

The news had no effect on the market, except to shave the value of the bank's stock on the London Stock Exchange, and bankers were pleased by the fact that the first public inking of the trouble was provided by Lloyds itself. However, bankers are not underestimating the negative impact on public opinion. Bankers admit that there is much to be concerned about, but they say the public is worried for the wrong reasons. The public's concern, of course, is for the safety of their deposits, but bankers stress that no individual has lost any money from they of the mishaps to date.

The danger, a French battler said, is "the pervasive definitionary impact" of fear itself.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8 (NYT),-On various fronts these days, the mammoth economic problems of the United States and the entire world are being subjected to intensive fluoroscopic scrutiny by a great variety of experts. The diagnosis is fairly simple because the current aliments are clearly known and defined, but the curative courses of action are more hazy-and the ultimate outcome of any therapy is highly

In the United States, three weeks of thorough examination of many facets of the American economy were begun Thursday in Washington when President Ford convened a panel of economists to discuss what might be done to bring the nation back to economic stability and renewed economic growth.

Meanwhile, in Europe, preparations were being made for two perhaps more momentous meetings: the weekend gathering of Western finance ministers and central bankers in France and Thursday's meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to Vienna.

Quite clearly, all of these sessions are interrelated because the world has become so interdependent. What happens in the economic realm in one part of the globe often induces quick repercussions in many other So it has been with respect to the major current prob-lems—rampaging inflation, soar-ing interest rates and the explosive rise in international oil

No Startling Ideas

At last week's economic conference in Washington, there developed, as expected, a wide range of views on many economic emerged, although it was notable that most speakers seemed more concerned with the danger of a deeper recession or prolonged stagoation than the prospect of worsening inflation.

Somewhat surprisingly, most of the 28 nongoverment partici-pants at this anti-inflation conference—those of conservative bent as well as the liberals agreed that the United States should now be moderately easing its tightly restrictive monetary policy to avoid further economic slippage, to lower interest rates, to bolster employment and to in the money supply annually but

Presumably the advocates of easter money were not recommending a change from the federal reserve's long-term target of 5 per cent to 6 percent growth rather to move from the severely restrictive stance of the last two months, when there was zero growth in the money supply. To be sure, the United States is burdened with a full measure that must be resolved with dispatch, although, as recent data showed, there are still elements of great strength in the domestic economy, particularly in business capital spending, the new order trend and the inventory position. And the next government crop report may show some considerable improvement in crop pros-pects as a result of recent rains. It is obvious, too, that troubles elsewhere in the world are much more ominous for other nations and, ultimately, for the United States as well. No short-term solution appears to be available to the oil-consuming countries, unless, some-how, the producing countries can be convinced that their long-term interest, as well as that of the whole world, depends on a partial rollback of the excessively in-flated level of petrolcum prices. At this point, however, that does not seem to be in the cards. The members of OPEC appear determined to maintain oil prices at least at current levels. do that, they have been reducing the supply of oil as a countermeasure to curtailed demand. Thus, the coming meeting in Vienna offers little comfort for an oil-pinched world. The current expectation is that the oil producers will maintain their prices for three more months at least. Earlier hopes for some easing have virtually vanished. But the whole world desperately needs some reduction in its oil bill—for psychological reasons as well as real economic considerations. International economic prospects would be im-mensely enhanced by such a turnabout.

A consequence of higher oil costs has been an even more disproportionate rise in the cost (Continued on Page 11, Col. 3)

—Euromarket

(Continued From Page 9) volume of credits arranged on the Eurocurrency market since June is evidence of the new caution. But there is some good news. Desoite the widely reported cries of the medium and small-sized banks operating in the Euromarket that they are finding it difficult to attract new deposits, no bank has been forced to renege

on any of its loan commitments. Bankers are now hopeful that the worst of this liquidity squeeze is past as the big banks are actively discouraging new deposits from the oil producers and the high-interest rates available at the smaller establishments should succeed in attracting new deposits.

For the time being, however, very little new business is being done in the syndicated bank loan market. Duke Power, which had been trying to arrange a $35-million loan at one percentage point over the London interbank offered rate, has been forced to pull out. Public utilities are finding it increasingly difficult to raise money in the New York market and European bankers are not keen to fill the gap. In addition, Duke's commercial paper rating in the United States was downgraded last week by one of the creditrating agencies,

Duke's withdrawal probably means that the many other U.S. utilities that were hoping to tap have tough going, if they try

France's Credit National is reportedly trying to interest Mid-east investors in buying $200 million to $500 million of seven to 10-year notes. One hitch is that the lenders prefer a fixed rate of interest while the borrower wants a floating rate tied to the sixmonth London interbank offered rate (LIBOR), Credit National may try to syndicate the loan to banks if it cannot come to terms in the Middle East.

Bankers are now anticipating a decline in short-term interest rates by early next year. They expect the economic slowdown will be full blown by then, prompting a significant relaxation in credit policies by the major Western states. (Long-term rates are not expected to decline significantly demand for long-term financing.) As a result, bankers report that Mideast investors are now looking for fixed interest rates on high-grade medium-term paper, while rates are still very high rather than floating-rate coupons whose yields will decline. albeit with some lag, as shortterm rates fall.

Typical of what these investors are looking for was the private placement last week for the Austrian Control Bank. It sold 50 million deutsche marks of four-year notes with a coupon of 9 3/4 per cent and an issue price of 99 for a yield of just over 10 per cent. The notes are guaranteed by the govern-

Mideast investors are also expected to take about one-third of the Agricultural Credit Corp. of Ireland's 12 million unit of account public loan. That will carry a 10 per cent coupon, but the yield will be a bit higher as it will probably be priced at a discount.

The only other loan on offer last week was for the Algemene Bank Nederland which floated a 70-million-guilder, five-year losn with a coupon of 10 1/2 per cent and an issue price of 99 1/2. The coupon is a quarter of a point lower than the previous Euroguilder issue, but this is attributed to the prime credit rating given the bank Expected to be on offer shortly is another floating rate note this time for a French borrower, which reportedly will be offering three-quarters of a percentage point over LIBOR for $20 million to $25 million.

In the secondary market, prices were off sharply in both the dollar and DM sectors. German bankers report the 3 per cent slide in prices will probably put a crimp in the flow of private placements. Dollar bond prices were off by up to 3 per cent. International Institutions

SPOKANE, Wash., Sept. 8 (UPI).—Sharpshooting guard Monte Towe fired in 16 points in the second half to lead the U.S. collegiate all-stars to a 75-69 victory over the Soviet national basketball team yesterday.

The Americans also won here Friday night, 82-61, and now have a 3-1 lead over the Russinns in their sin-game series.

The all-stars started the come in much the same manner as Friday's contest, jumping to a quick lead with an aggressive man-to-man defense and a fastbreak offense highlighted by some fancy passing. The Americans held the Soviet

taken. On Friday, it was reported

In the vital food area, for instance, an already rising price trend rooted in inadequate supplies was pushed even higher by the surge in the cost of petroleumbased fertilizers and the costs of producing tractors and tools

As various countries find they must spend much more for their oil supplies, it has become evident that much less money has been available for other purposes. Thus, while rates of inflation continue to flare, real economic growth has been slowed almost everywhere, and many jobs have been threatened.

Presumably the growth record in some of the poorer countries is the most adverse. In that part of the world, however, the consetraumatic than growth perfor-mance. In some of the countries, the combination of inflation fever and economic anemia has forced governments to choose between paying higher oil costs and subsidizing needed imports of food. Since oil is essential to keep their economies running its high cost has made less money available to meet both fuel and food-import costs-and the choice has been to trim food imports, exacerbating hunger problems.

The huge rise in the price of oil has been partly responsible tor accelerating inflation in many for accelerating ministuri in many parts of the world as well. The United States is rightly con-cerned by its current 12 per cent annual rate of inflation, but the record is even more disturbing in other parts of the world, with inflation rates ranging up to 28

For NBA Lakers NEW YORK, Sept. 8 (NYT) .--

Cazzie Russell is going south for the winter. The former University of Michigan all-American basketball player has signed a multi-year contract with the Los Angeles Lakers following the expiration of his contract with the Golden State Warriors in northern California, Terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

Russell, 30, has played eight years in the National Basketball Association. He said this was the first time in the league's history that a player had finished his option year and become a free agent.

"I'm relieved that this thing is over," said Russell. He said the Warriors "didn't want to give me the type of contract I was asking. There were some other personal reasons," he added.

Since there is no precedent, it is not known whether the Lakers must compensate Golden State because they signed Russell.

THE WAY LIFE WAS Text by Jeffrey Simpson. Pictures by 16 photograph Praeger. 220 pp. $19.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

PRIEND of mine remarked ly crowd." While they wor. A that, when you go back to a lover you have given up, you generally confirm your original reasons for leaving. I think this observation would apply even more forcefully to the American way of life. If all of us who suffer from nostalgia could "go home again," I doubt that we would be happy there, for what we remember is usually an edited or idealized version of the past, attractive only in contrast to a depressed picture of the present. The ego, according to the Gestalt psychologist Wolfgang Köhler, is spatially located be-tween "in front of" and "behind." Whatever the scientific value of this concept, it has a metaphorical aptness here. Made sentimental by the past, sophisticated by the promise of the future, the ego hesitates. Shall we die of a broken heart or go to the moon? As a confirmed nostalgist my-self. I was rudely awakened by "The Way Life Was," a photo-graphic record of America between 1880 and 1915. After looking at these pictures of a Kansas village, a New England mill town, the sod houses of Nebraska, the Lower East Side, Chinatown, the rural South, the cowboy and Indian—even New York City's "400"

—I realized that the life I yearn for is probably a perversion of a chapter from a-19th-century English pastoral novel.

Unlike most photographic portraits of the American past, "The Way Life Was" is neither sentimentalized nor idealized. does it fish for cheap effects in melodramatic muckraking. The title is accurate: this is, literally, the way life was in the United States between 1880 and 1915.

"Quaint" is the adjective most often used to characterize American customs when nothing better can be said for them. I am afraid, however, that most of these pictures would hardly justify even that Bleak or barren might come closer. Someone who lives in a sod hut or a farmer who works from dawn to dark and then goes to bed might be too close to the land. In such cases, the "great chain of being' bears an uncomfortable resemblance to the fetters of a prisoner. Though I would say, on the basis of these pictures, that Americans in that period experienced a greater sense of community. this "togetherness" does not appear to be much more appealing than the allenation of "the lone-Solution to Friday's Puzzle

Mr. Broyard is a N Times book reviewer.

Early in the United States mil Hort, the top Czech grandmaster who emerged as co-champion with Pal Benko, complained to me about Swiss system events, saying that they involved handicaps.

The Swiss system provides that in each round players with identical scores are with identical scores are paired. For the first round, the players are ranked according to their Elo ratings, so that player No. 1 meets player No. 272 and player No. 2 meets player No. 273, etc., in a 542-man field. Thus, from the start player No. 1 etc., in a 542-man field. Thus, from the start, player No. 1 faces a stronger opponent than the opponent his chief rival, player No. 2, faces.

So it continues throughout. Going into Round 6, for example, there were only four entrants with perfect scores. Accordingly, the highest rated player in the group, Hort with a rating of 2600, was paired with the third rated, Benko (2515), while the second rated, Samuel Reshevsky (2542) was paired with the (2542) was paired with the fourth rated, Jon Jacobs (2260).

Handicaps Surmounted

Nevertheless, while handicaps cannot be eliminated from the Swiss system, Hort himself proved that they can be surmounted, not only winning from Benko while Reshevsky drew with Jacobs, but achieving his first place tie with a 10-2 score. In the fifth round, Hort caught Frank Thornally, forcaught Frank Thornally, for-merly of California and now a New York master, in a devastating pin that produced the victory.

Against Hort's Scheveningen Variation, Thornally's 10 K-R1 and 11 N/4-K2 were much too passive, allowing Black an effortless development. However, after 10 B-K3, N-B3; 11 N-N3, P-ON4, it is still a question whether White can maintain the initiative

The Nonvoter's Case

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK.—Is anybody going on seiling us the notion that the to vote in this year's electronic andidate is that prize American tions? Probably. Old habits die hard and old maxims keep ringing in the ears long after their absurdity has been universally conceded. This is why good citizens always they know what they are voting for or not. They were taught years ago that not voting was bad citizenship and that society would approach its nearest to perfection when every elicible voter went to the polls and did his duty. We now know this to be pernt cions nonsense, but it is still considered subversive to say so. If every eligible voter went to the polls one year, we might well elect a government worse than the one we elected in 1972 with a relatively small turnout.

It seems far more sensible for people who are not well informed about candidates to abstain from voting and leave it to those who are, for what will make democracy work, if anything will, is not a mass electorate but an informed electorate. . -

The difficulty nowadays lies in becoming informed. What is called the campaign is usually an elaborate and expensive exerrise in triviality, deceit and mendacity In modern times it has become exceedingly rare for candidates to discuss the government business they would have to conduct if elected, so that there is little chance to learn whether they have even minimal professional competence.

Political campaigns are deliber-ately built to make judgments difficult for the voters. Commonly, they attempt to persuade the voter that the candidate is a good television performer and looks trustworthy. They also strive to show that the candidate has good teeth, a happy family a nondescript mind. None of this information is very interesting if you are trying to decide whether the candidate believes in a regressive tax structure, subsidies for failing corporations, expanded health care programs or any of the other dull nutsand-bolts stuff he will have to deal with if elected.

Instead, campaigns concentrate noodnik—the regular guy—and gets along well with his loved ones none of which has anything at all to do with the case. There is no reason to believe that a sadistic wife beater who detests everybody at the country club may not, despite that, make an excellent government officer.

When campaigns do come to grips with "issues," the result is usually thundering piffle. In the Kennedy-Nixon campaign of 1960, famed for its so-called "debates," the great "issue" was what American policy should be toward Quemoy and Matsu. Anybody remember who they were?

In 1972, George McGovern spent months trying to defend himself on the "issues" of legalizing marijuana, amnesty for war evaders and abortion.

None of these have much to do with whether McGovern was qualified to deal with the foreign policy and economic problems he would have confronted as president in 1973, but the Nixon people had successfully turned them into "issues" which voters judged important.

Voters, of course, seem to prefer these bogus debates about issues that aren't, and so conspire to keep themselves in the dark. The explanation may be that campaign "issues" are deliberately chosen by candidates for entertainment value, the politicians having an eye on the necessity for keeping the voters Arguing about whether marijuana should be legalized is, after all, a lot more fun that listening to somebody explain how unemployment might be cut to 4 per cent. It doesn't have anything to do with the presidency, but it will keep emotions aroused sufficiently to get peo-ple to the polls on election day. If it is almost impossible any longer to become adequately informed about presidential candidates to risk a vote for one or the other, imagine how hard it to learn enough about state and local office seekers to justify voting for anybody.

Making choices between people about whom you know nothing. except that they possess good teeth and talk about "bold new departures," is something like firing a shotgun blindfolded and the notion that everybody ought to do so as a civic duty is dan-

The more sensible act is to withhold one's vote in any contest about which the voter feels poorly informed. In some cases this would result in nobody getting any votes at all, which would not be disastrous. In presidential elections, we might get men elected by only 200 or 300 voters, which would be a positive gain, since it would put an end to the habit these birds have of sitting around the White House telling themselves they are "the president of all the people."

Feminists Try to Steal Miss America's Show

By Judy Klemesrud

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Sept. 8 (NYT).—Two thousand feminists, dressed in costumes and led by 20 "wonder women ' marched down the Boardwalk here vesterday in a parade they hoped might upstage the nearby Miss America pageant. The feminists were here for a three-day convention that they called "Wonder Women Conference: No Myth, America." It is sponsored by the 10-state Eastern Region of the National Organization for Women. Many of the paraders were dressed to portray women's accomplishments down through the years. Members of the E County, New Jersey, NOW, who filed the lawsuit that resulted in girls being able to join the uniforms and carried signs that said, "Diamonds are a girl's best

A few blocks away, at Convention Hall, 50 contestants-"sex objects" to the feminists competed for the title of Miss America of 1975. The contes had been invited to take part in the parade and other feminist activities, but, if any did, they kept their identities to them

[Miss Texas, Shirley Coth-ran, was named Miss America last night. She is the second Miss America in four years from the town of Benton, Texas. The other, Phyllis George, was on stage as 2 co-hostess when Miss America was crowned by her predecesser, Rebecca Ann King of Colorado.

[Miss Cothran, 21, a hazel-eyed brunette, wept as she received her crown and scepter. As Bert Parks crooned "There She Is," she walked down the runway without the traditional red velvet robe. Pageant officlais discarded it this year as outdated.

(The new queen told reporters the woman she admires the most is Pat Nixon, because "she has stood by the side of her husband in all his troubles." She said she also admired the former President. She said Richard Nixon had "withstood a lot of pressure" and made some "wise decisions," including that (Asked about the feminists' meeting. Miss America replied, "I respect what they're doing and I hope that they respect what I do.' "I enjoy being a woman," she

The feminists had deliberately picked their convention dates to coincide with the beauty "We want to provide the country with an alternative view of women," said Judy Murphy, the NOW conference coordinator. "We want to show woman as a full human being -a provider, creator and thinker, not just as an object or a mythical creature as exemplified by the bathing suit-clad Miss America."

Albert Marks jr., an Atlantic City stockbroker who is chairman of the Miss America pagcant, said, without referring to NOW by name: "They can do their thing. We will do our thing, and never the twain shall

To some feminists, the whole affair brought back memories of September, 1968, when about 100 members of the then fledgling Women's Liberation Movement picketed the pageant on the boardwalk outside of Conven-

The women tossed girdles, bras, hair curlers and false eyelashes into a "freedom trash can." Although the contents of the can were never burned, the incident was widely reported and out of it grew the pejorative term "bra burners" for militant feminists.

The "wonder women parade." as yesterday's march was called. was led by the Holy Child Marching 100, a band of boys and girls from Staten Island. N.Y. They had been last-minute repiacements for the Queens Village Queens, an all-girl drum and bugle corps from Warwick, N.Y., who canceled their appearance according to Mrs. Murphy, "because of pressures by their parents and by 'right-to-life' groups." (Many feminists favor abortion.)

The women at the NOW convention seem to represent all ages, ethnic groups and walks of life. There were white-haired women with canes, teen-age girls with their mothers-and even a sprinkling of men.

When they were not listening to speeches or marching, the feminists were attending wonder women workshops" on such subjects as feminists humor belly dancing, heterosexuality and bisexuality, abortion, rape, negotiating the marriage contract and women in prison.
